Dr. Tandy Freeman flew directly from the Professional Bull Riders 2007 World Series in Las Vegas to the 2007 ODT Conference and Expo in Fort Wayne, IN to speak on the growing need for orthopedic innovations.

As medical director of the two top rodeo organizations in the world, Dr. Tandy Freeman has treated some of the toughest and most severely injured athletes – professional bull riders, rodeo cowboys and cowgirls. In this capacity, the West Texan has covered events across the U.S. and in Canada, Brazil, and Australia treating injuries that occur when 2,000 lbs. of raging bull collide with the fragile human body or the ballet of rider and horse goes awry.

That experience serves him well when diagnosing and treating the debilitating injuries and everyday strains of North Texas athletes of all ages and backgrounds. Dr. Freeman's specialties are arthroscopic and reconstructive surgeries of the knee and shoulder.

Beyond rodeo, he was Team Physician of the Dallas Mavericks, where he kept superstars Dirk Nowitzki and Steve Nash in peak condition, was orthopedic consultant to the Dallas Burn, was team physician of the Dallas Freeze of the Central Hockey League and has served as a member of the physician pool to the U.S. Ski Team.
